To begin with, there are various factors that contribute to the surge in global population. Firstly, medical advancement is responsible for longer life expectancy, which has allowed people to die at a slower rate. People in the past, for example, were affected by diseases and plagues that were incurable. However, those born in this era are able to live long lives thanks to scientific developments such as vaccines and antibiotics. Secondly, another cause that accelerates the population surge around the world is the increased accessibility to food.

A century ago, many died of starvation, whereas hunger issues have disappeared in most parts of the world today.

With regard to my point of view, I personally believe that the uncontrollable growth of the population is an urgent matter that requires immediate attention/management. To explain simply, this is because the surge in global population can lead to numerous problems, especially environmental issues.

To illustrate, more people on the planet means more use of environmental resources, including plastic bags and water. As a result/consequently, the world could become uncontrollably polluted. If the growth rate of the world's population remains unregulated. From this perspective, it is evident that this is a pressing issue that needs to be tackled as urgently as possible.

In conclusion, although it is undeniable that the increase in population is inevitable, I am of the opinion that all parties/stakeholders should exert control over the issue in order to build a livable world in the long run.
