It is irrefutable that patriotism plays an important role in creating unity within one nation. While it can be both positive and negative, this essay will elaborate on the reasons why I believe that its drawbacks are far greater than its benefits.

To begin with, there are various disadvantages associated with patriotism. The first drawback is that when citizens are excessively proud of their nation, this can encourage a sense of hatred against other countries. For example, soldiers were able to kill people from other nations during the Second World War because they were taught to consider those from other countries worthless. Secondly, another disadvantage of patriotism is that it can enable people to discriminate against others who do not belong to their culture and nation. In many countries, for example, language is considered part of national pride, so many are victims of public harassment when they speak with a foreign accent.

On the other hand, some opponents might argue that patriotism can be beneficial to society, seeing that I can build a sense of solidarity among citizens. To put it simply, when people believe that they belong to the same nation, they are less likely to have conflicts. However, this argument is simply invalid, as in this digital age, it is more crucial for individuals to become global citizens. To clarify, instead of believing that they are superior to others due to their nationality, people should embrace the fact that everybody belongs to the same world. As a result, this can lead to fewer disputes among nations in the long run.

In conclusion, although it is undeniable that many are concerned that there will no harmony without a sense of national pride, this essay demonstrated that the detrimental outcomes of patriotism outweigh its potential benefits.
