

Task 2 : Nuclear weapons - 25 February

Some believe that nuclear weapons benefit the world at large. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Vocabulary

Global (adj.) เกี่ยวกับโลก global community, citizens, population

Diplomacy - การทูต

Country - nation - state

Only - solely

Threaten - คุกคาม

Leverage - ทำให้อยู่เหนือ

Negotiation - การต่อรอง

Fragility - weakness (fragile - weak)

Use - utilize (- utilization), employ (employment - งาน), deploy (deployment)/exploit (-) (exploitation)

Mainly - primarily

Effect - result, consequence, impact - repercussion (-) ผลลัพธ์

Weapon - arms, artillery

Appropriate - proper - เหมาะสม / inappropriate - improper = not proper

Devastating - damaging - destructive (adj.) ที่ทำลายล้าง

Humans - the human race, humanity, human beings

Extend (v.) ี้น - extensive - large reap/ derive benefits from - ได้รับประโยชน์จาก

Grammar

- if + v.3 = ถ้าถูกต้อง (Exercise, if done correctly, can be very beneficial.)

Flow

- from this perspective, in this respect, therefore, in a sense

Introduction

While it is been widely claimed that nuclear weapons could benefit the global community, others argue that their possible/ potential dangers should be not disregarded. I agree with the latter argument, and my reasons will be elaborated on in this essay.

Body 1

To begin with, nuclear weapons will not benefit the global population as a whole because they were originally invented as a diplomatic tool in international relations. To put it simply, despite the fact these weapons play a crucial in role in international diplomacy, their use in the past solely benefitted one nation or a specific group of country. For example, there were a number of instances where North Korea threatened to deploy its nuclear arms to leverage its negotiations with powerful nations such as the US and China. As a consequence, the country received special treatment from global superpowers despite its economic fragility. From this perspective, it is evident that these weapons are primarily employed to serve the interests of a single nation, not global society as many might be led to believe.

Body 2

Furthermore, the potential impacts of nuclear artillery, if employed inappropriately, should be not be dismissed, as they might lead to devastating consequences for the human race as a whole. The deployment of nuclear bombs during World War 2, for instance, illustrated the extensive damaging impacts of this dangerous technology. In fact, the repercussions of its radioactive effects are still visible up to this day. In this respect, it is apparent that while these armaments have been proven to be useless for the global community, their destructive power/ potential could also result in more harm than many would have imagined/ many would imagine.

Conclusion

In conclusion, although it is undeniable that nuclear artillery can be used as a powerful diplomatic strategy, I am of the opinion that the global society can barely/ hardly/ scarcely/ rarely reap benefits from it.