Rather than learning about historical figures in their own country, youngsters in this day and age are more interested in stories about international pop or movie stars. This essay will discuss reasons for this and will also provide some suggestions in order to encourage more awareness of important public figures in their country's history.

To begin with, the fact youngsters nowadays prefer to learn about the stories of the international celebrities is caused by various reasons. Firstly, the growing popularity of international movies and music is the primary factor due to the growth of new media channels such as YouTube and Netflix. This explains why an increasing number of teenagers tends to follow the news of Hollywood stars or Korean singers instead of influential figures in their country. Secondly, even though some people have made a wide range of significant contributions to a nation, the presentation of their biography is mostly tedious, causing the new generation to lose interest in their own history.

On the bright side, there are some actions that could be taken to encourage more young people to study the history of important figures in their country. First and foremost, it is certainly crucial to improve how the biographies of these people are presented. For example, rather than a monotonous TV presentation, they can be animated and narrated in an entertaining manner. Another solution to this is probably to integrate the new and appealing arrangements of their biographies into modern streaming services such as Netflix. All in all, these actions could potentially incentivize the youth to take an interest in their national history.

In conclusion, while the rising popularity of international celebrities is inevitable, modernizing their presentation of the country's historical figures could incite the new generation to pay attention to their national history.
