

Life/ Ambition
Useful Ideas and Vocabulary

What ambitions do children usually have?

Why don't some people have dreams?

Why are some people very ambitious in their work?

How do people balance work and life?

Are people's goals changing with age?

How have people's goals changed in the last ten years?

What ambitions do children usually have?

That depends, to be honest. I feel like in the past, people wanted to be doctors and nurses and have a stable job, but nowadays I believe that children dream to have a happy life, a balanced life where they are happy and have a career that makes them happy.

Why don't some people have dream?

I think that having a dream or having an imagination is part of being a human, so I think that, generally speaking, everybody has a dream. People who say that they don't have a dream may probably be too shy to reveal what they want to be in life because they may be afraid that they might disappoint some people if they are not able to realize their goals.

Why are some people very ambitious in their work?

I think that it's just their nature. I think that people who are ambitious and work, generally, are competitive. For example, I know a lot of people who were great at school, and after graduation, they became really competitive at work. Honestly, I think that there's nothing wrong with it because it's just their nature to like competition.

How do people balance work and life?

That is a very important question in this day and age because, you know, a lot of people nowadays tend to overwork to the point where they don't have enough time for their families, so I think the easiest thing for people to do is just to have a clear separation between professional time and personal time. For example, when I'm at work, I give it my all; however, when my work is finished and I get home, I'm completely dissociated from work and I spend 100% of my time with my family or even myself.

Are people's goals changing with age?

Oh yeah, absolutely. For example, I used to want to become a pilot, but when I grew up, I realized that I didn't want to be responsible for other people's lives and safety, so I decided to change my career goal. So in short, I would say yes, people's life ambitions can change all the time.

How have people's goals changed in the last ten years?

I think that that is a very interesting question. I think that people in the past used to dream of having stable jobs like doctors or nurses or other 9 to 5 jobs. However, I think people nowadays dream of having freedom and think less about stability, so they would want to have a career that makes them happy instead of having a stable job that they don't like. That's why I've been hearing people talking about becoming a YouTuber or a traveler or a Vlogger, you know, the type of career that you wouldn't have thought about 10 years ago.