

Personalities

Useful ideas / vocabulary

- How do you think the personalities of men and women vary?
- How do companies try to assess the personalities of people who are applying for jobs?
- What traits do you think are most important for a person, as a member of society, to have?
- Do you think it's easy for a person to change their personality?

How do you think
the personalities
of men and women
vary?

I know that this is just a generalization, but in general, men are associated with stability and insensitivity, while women are generally thought to be sensitive. So, men would generally like sports and women would prefer doing things that are related to beauty.

How do companies try to assess the personalities of people who are applying for jobs?

In my opinion, it depends on what type of skills companies try to evaluate. For example, if they try to test the applicants' team-working skills, they can set up a simulation where different applicants work together and see who is the most outstanding in terms of working as a team. On the other hand, if they want to see if the applicant is somebody who is smart, I think that they can just try to give them a tough question to answer and see if they're able to come up with answers on their own.

What traits do you think are most important for a person, as a member of society, to have?

I think that in a world where individuality is celebrated, being respectful is the most important trait for people to have. People can have different opinions, but it's crucial for everybody to be respectful of others because people come from different backgrounds and everybody has to respect and be accepting of others' opinions. I think that a lot of the world's problems today are caused by the fact that people are not respectful of other people. I think that if people were more open-minded and accepting, the world would be a better place.

Do you think it's easy for a person
to change their personality?

I don't think so, because I think that personality is innate and it's impossible to change. However, it's possible for people to adapt their personalities to different situations because I think that even though personality is something that is innate, it can be heavily influenced by the environment. So, for example, if I am a funny person, I think that I will be funny no matter what, but the degree of humor can vary in different situations according to the appropriateness of the circumstance.