

Places / Traveling

Useful ideas and vocabulary

- What kind of people would like to go to a café?
- What are the pros and cons of low-cost air travel?
- How do you think people will travel in the future?
- Should the government in a country focus more on rail transport or road transport? Why?

What kind of people would like to go to a café?

I think it's especially people who have to stay awake during the day, especially people who work 9 to 5, because they have to work from very early in the morning until 6 or 7 in the afternoon, so they need some caffeine to sort of like stay awake and make sure that they can work in the afternoon because a lot of people would want to take naps, but if you work for a company, you're not allowed to take naps. Furthermore, I also think that there are also people who truly like the smell of coffee and the taste of coffee. Personally, I don't drink coffee, so I can't relate. However, I know a lot of people who go to cafés every week to try the new coffee from different parts of the world.

What are the pros and cons of low-cost air travel?

I think that the pro is pretty obvious when the plane tickets are cheap and affordable, people can travel to places without having to spend a lot of money. However, I think that the most annoying thing about low-cost travel is that you have to pay for everything. For example, when you fly, you have to pay for drinks; you have to pay for food, you have to pay for everything on the airplane. Maybe this is just me, but what I don't like is that when you fly low-cost, when you order something to eat, you end up eating alone, so it's kind of weird to see other people looking at you eating, if that makes sense.

How do you think people will travel in the future?

I feel like it depends on the distance. For example, in short distances, I think that people will use trains, or sky trains, or you know, public transport that's convenient. However, when it comes to long distances, I feel like people will prefer flying to driving because it's not only safer but also because there are a lot of low-cost airlines nowadays.

Should the government in a country focus more on rail transport or road transport? Why?

Because there are so many benefits to railway transport, the first thing that comes to my mind is that it's more eco-friendly because, generally, trains release fewer polluting gases than cars. Secondly, it is actually safer to travel by train than by car according to statistics, so yeah, I think that countries, especially Thailand, should invest in the construction and development of railway systems in order to encourage more people to use trains in the future.