What can people do on social media?

I can think of a couple of things, actually. The first thing that comes to my mind is that people can use social media for relaxation. For instance, people would go on Facebook or Instagram to post photos and stories and also to look at other people's stories. On the other hand, lately, I've been seeing that a lot of teachers on the Internet are using social media to share their knowledge. So, I would say that people mainly utilize social media for personal and educational purposes.

Do you think older people and
younger people
will use the same
social media
software?

I think so because we could see that nowadays certain social media platforms are more popular among young people than among old people. For example, young people would prefer using applications like Instagram because it's more visual, while old people would use Line because it's easy and very intuitive to use. Therefore, I would say that in the future, there will be separate applications for young people and the elderly.

Do older people
spend much time
on social media?

Although a lot of people have the stereotype that old people don't spend much time on social media because they don't know how to use technology, I would say that from my own experience, old people tend to spend a lot of time on social media, especially on Facebook. For example, my grandmother would spend hours and hours each day using Line to communicate with her friends.

Are non-social media like
television and newspaper still valid?

Although new media like social media are becoming more and more popular, I still think traditional media like television and radio will still be prevalent, especially among educated individuals. I think that the main difference between social media and news on TV or newspapers is that newspapers tend to offer more analyzed pieces of information than social media, so if people want information that is more detailed and elaborate, they would read the newspaper because it is more reliable compared to social media.
