The table and pie chart compare the total number of visitors to Ashdown Museum, and visitor satisfaction before and after its refurbishment.

Overall, it can be clearly observed that the number of visitors increased after the renovation. Interestingly, while the level of dissatisfaction was high before the refurbishment, that of those who were reported to be satisfied and very satisfied significantly rose after the renovation.

Starting the number of visitors, there were 74,000 people who came to the museum. On the other hand, after the renovation, there were 92,000 people who visited, which was a considerable increase of almost 20,000.

With regard to the visitor satisfaction level, at 40%, the majority of visitors were revealed to be dissatisfied, followed by those who were said to be satisfied at 30%. However, with the renovation of the museum, the satisfaction level grew dramatically to 40%, which accounted for the highest proportion of all visitors. Similarly, the percentage of very satisfied visitors also skyrocketed from 15% to 35%, which was more than double.
