While it is considered by some that men should not be allowed to take care of their skin by using skincare products, some others believe that men should be encouraged to do so. This essay will explain both points of view and my agreement with the latter argument.

To begin with, it might be reasonable for some to believe that men should not use skincare products as it is believed that these products are designated solely for women. In the past, for example, masculinity was associated with physical strength. For this reason, whenever men start to apply serums or sunscreen to keep their skin healthy, they tend to be judged for being too feminine.

However, opponents claim that it should be socially acceptable for men to use beauty products for grooming. This is probably because the society has considerably changed, and men have to look presentable for both personal and professional lives. In today's word, for example, men have to appear clean and smell nice if they work in jobs that require interpersonal communication, especially in sales and customer service.

Personally, I strongly agree that it should be admissible for men to take care of their skin wellbeing through the use of products such as perfumes and moisturizers. To explain simply, the majority of men today no longer work in physical jobs, so it will be an absolute necessity for them to make sure that they are well groomed before their meetings with clients.

In conclusion, although it might seem unfamiliar to some, I am of the opinion that men should not feel guilty for paying attention to their appearance.
